Read All About It

A Golden Age by Tahmima Anam. A young widow leading a peaceful life with her two teenage children in East Pakistan gets drawn into the 1971 Bangladesh war for independence in this first of a proposed trilogy.

Life Class by Pat Barker. Art student Paul is taking a life-drawing class in 1914, but volunteers for the Belgian Red Cross when World War I begins, in this exploration of love and war by the author of Regeneration.

People of the Book by Geraldine Brooks. Rare book expert Hanna is asked to analyze and conserve the Sarajevo Haggadah, finding clues in the binding that unlock the book's mysteries, going back to 1480 Seville. Brooks won the 2006 Pulitzer Prize for March.

Gardens of Water by Alan Drew. Teenager Dylan, living with his American teacher parents in Istanbul, falls for Irem, the daughter of devout Muslims, causing tension in both families in this first novel.

The Heroines by Eileen Favorite. In this highly imaginative novel, a mother and daughter run a retreat where literary heroines such as Madame Bovary and Catherine Linton can take temporary refuge from their tragic destinies.

Becky: the Life and Loves of Becky Thatcher by Lenore Hart. Tom Sawyer's childhood sweetheart, now married to Tom's cousin, sets off on a journey from Missouri to San Francisco to save her family.

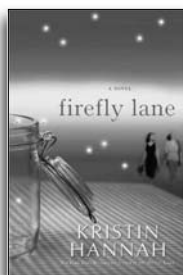

Song Yet Sung by James McBride. Just before the Civil War, young runaway slave Liz is nabbed and hit on the head by a posse of slave catchers. The head injury causes visions which foretell the future and help her escape, in this lyrical novel by the author of The Color of Water.

The Senator's Wife by Sue Miller. Newly married and pregnant Meri wonders why her neighbor Delia stays married to Senator Tom Naughton, a chronic womanizer, in this latest by the author of Lost in the Forest.
